Transforming Generational Differences into a Competitive Advantage

Sherri Elliott-Yearly, Gen InsYght

Say "hello" to the new American workforce.

For the first time in history, communicating with employees means reaching out to four distinct generations:

- Traditionalists
- Boomers
- Xers
- Millennials

Each group has different values, different experiences and different expectations. Needless to say, the rules of recruitment and retention haven't just changed; they've been thrown out altogether.

At Gen InsYght, Sherri brings together the experts of this emerging field to help clients effectively recruit, retain, and motivate the best talent from each generation. They can transform generational differences into a true competitive advantage...one that will last for generations to come.

I hail from: Shreveport, Louisiana and now live in Plano.

When I'm not hard at work, my "Play Time" includes: baseball tournaments with my son, reading, and enjoying dinner out with friends.

A bit of wisdom or suggestion I can share with another woman, or person, in business is: something I like to share with the others, particularly the people I interview to come work with me is you can have it all – family time, spiritual time, a meaningful career, time with your friends, and time to give back to the community. You just have to prioritize and try to make every day count!

The greatest thing about networking with the Women's Division is: we can all share our triumphs and challenges with women who know what it is like to walk in our shoes.

I plan to make connections in 2010 by: connecting through the Plano Chamber, WIFS (Women in Insurance and Financial Services) and by staying connected with the centers of influences I have developed throughout the years.
